COMMISSIONERS' NOTICE.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE District of Columbia, Washington, D. C. Sept. 2, 1919. Ondered: That paragraph 5 of section 193 of the building regulations of the District of Columbia, is barely amended so as to require that a clear space from the outer edge of curb to outer face of projections and steps will be preserved of not less than.—Fifteen feet on streets more than 99 feet wide; twelve feet or streets over 89 feet wide and including 99 feet; ten feet on streets from 60 to 80 feet wide, both inclusive. Wherever the application of the above limitations would result in encroachments within the sidewalk space as outlined by the existing general conditions on the square, the projections may in such case be limited to the widths established by the said existing general conditions. WRITING POETRY.

John Milton, in his humble home, began to write a corking pome concerning Eden and the way in which our parents went astray. And when he'd penned six lines or more, his wife came bustling to the door. She cried: "Jack Milton, you're no good! You didn't bring me any wood, and you forgot to milk the cow. and there you sit a-scribbling now!" The poor old bard dropped pen and ink, convinced that life was on the blink, and brought in wood and milked the cow; then, with a wet rag on his brow, his good old meerschaum pipe he stoked, and wrote eight lines that fairly smoked. And then his eldest daughter came, and said: "It is a doggone shame that I must wear back number lids, and canvas gloves when I want kids. There's Mandy Jenkins, lives next door; she blew herself at Simpson's store for new spring gowns that beat the band: I've just the rags in which I stand. But then, her father has some sense; he's selling patent barb wire fence, and has a bank account so large you couldn't pile it on a barge, while my old daddy spends his time in grinding out a bughouse rhyme." Poor Milton bought the girl a hat, then slammed the door and kicked the cat, and swallowed, in one long, fierce drink, a half pint flask of purple ink.
